THE CANADIAN INSTITUTE

In the face of escalating concern about the environment, jurisdictions across Canada have moved very quickly to establish tough new laws and strengthen existing statutes to ensure that environmental considerations are at the forefront of new development proposals. Recent decisions such as Rafferty-Alameda, Oldman River and Alberta-Pacific underscore the extent to which the regulators are embracing the new environmental ethic. A clear understanding of environmental assessment and how the process affects both private and public initiatives is now an essential component of strategic decision-making.

The Canadian Institute has, for this timely conference, assembled a unique faculty of public, corporate, consulting and legal professionals to share their special knowledge in environmental assessment and show you how to successfully navigate the often treacherous waters of regulatory and public review.

Conference attendees will:

- Discuss streamlining the provincial assessment process
- Learn how to master the regulatory framework and make it work for you
- Hear about new federal regulatory developments
- Discover how municipalities are affected by the process
- Examine the role of consultants in the assessment

The legal, management and operational issues to be discussed are too important to overlook. Registration for this special event is limited.

Reserve your place today.
